In the inclusive peace process, the women's inclusion played a crucial role. They provided inputs to various national and international actors through regular dialogues. The inclusion of women's groups and organizations involved in the peace process helped to confront the existing power structures and to advocate for equitable decision-making procedures. The women's role in the peace process was instrumental in increasing the representation and influence of women in various national and international actors. Additionally, the involvement of women in the peace process helped to create a more inclusive and diverse political landscape, which was beneficial for all stakeholders.

The existing power structures were constrained in the women's influence, which helped to expand the representation and influence of women in various political and social spheres. The involvement of women in the peace process helped to increase the gender diversity in various political and social spheres, which was beneficial for all stakeholders. Additionally, the involvement of women in the peace process helped to create a more inclusive and diverse political landscape, which was beneficial for all stakeholders.