The Peace Process Support Programme (2000-2008) sought to empower women in conflict situations, including Somalia, South Sudan, Ukraine, Syria, Yemen, Sudan, Afghanistan, Burundi, Libya, Myanmar, Philippines, Colombia, and civil society organizations. The programme aimed to ensure women’s participation in peace processes,广纳女性参与和影响，建立可持续的和平进程。Women’s inclusion and influence were key factors in enabling and supporting conflict parties, women’s groups, and civil society organizations. The programme highlights the importance of gendered roles and identities in shaping conflict dynamics and provides examples of successful women’s mediation initiatives in various contexts. The qualitative dataset consists of 100 cases that have been selected and published through academic institutions, think tanks, and NGOs. The dataset aims to contribute to the literature on peace processes and conflict resolution.
